The British Book Trade 1475-1890: A Bibliography

“That this important historical bibliography, which supersedes relevant sections of such works as Bigmore and Wyman (A Bibliography of Printing), will be useful to rare-book curators, reference librarians, and scholars in varied fields is not surprising. [T.H. Howard-Hill’s] training, experience, and patience contributed to the quality of this authoritative work of scholarship.”

—Maurice York

“Contents include book production and distribution, regulation, censorship, trials, individual publishers and printers, typographers, paper and papermaking, illustration processes, presses and machines, prices and wages, bookbinding, copyright, collections and sales, and libraries, among many other topics. This is a great work of bibliographical reference that should be in all libraries.”

—W. Baker

“I imagine that the bibliography will most assist scholars of our period in locating primary materials in magazines and, of course, secondary materials in nineteenth-century books and magazines. It will be invaluable to those searching the Stationer’s Company, engravers, the technologies of print and paper, and the history of book history.”

—James E. May, Editor of The Eighteenth-Century Intelligencer

“The British Book Trade covers an important and fascinating era of book-trade history and anyone who has an interest in British Bibliography...will find this resource essential.” —Lloyd Keane, Papers of the Bibliographical Society of Canada
